

BLIZZARD SWEEPS DOWN UPON THE CAPITAL CUTTING OFF COMMUNICATION WITH THE WORLD than an inch deep, and by noon this had become water, but it did not deter the crowd from trying to gain points of vantage from which to view the parade.

Beginning early last night, the snow that followed the rain of yesterday started, covering everything with a sticky coating of white. By daylight there were four inches of snow on the ground. It was driven by a gale from the west that at times mounted to the velocity of twenty miles an hour. Early pedestrians found it almost impossible to make their way about. They had to walk, for there were no street car accommodations but in spots.

Wires All Down.
All over the city telephone and telegraph wires and poles were down, trees were felled under the enormous weight of their burden and the gay decorations that lined the Avenue Tuesday night were soaked with rain yesterday and then, frazzled out by the wind, were borne down to the streets by the weight of the snow.

Fresh from their work in Cuba, the troops that came to spend the week at Washington and take part in the parade, are quartered in flimsy tents at St. Asaph's, Va., at the west end of the highway bridge, where the snow-laden winds get a clean sweep at them. The men who had become used to the warm winds of the "Pearl of the Antilles," suffered and shivered throughout the night.

There was no way for them to get out of the intense cold, and, with the city crowded to the limit with visitors, there was no place for them to go.

All Traffic Tied Up.

City cars were delayed from the start of the day, although both companies had cars running all night. The wind-swept streets were piled high with drifts that stuck like plaster of Paris, and the sweepers found it difficult to remove it. Only by running cars in long, strings was it possible to keep the tracks clear enough to make headway.

Early morning cars were not crowded for the reason that the Government employees who usually utilize them are taking a holiday, and in the light of the present weather conditions it is possible they may get another tomorrow.

On Brightwood avenue, and along Girard street northwest, near Eleventh, traffic was blocked by electric light and telephone poles falling into the streets. Near Fifth and New York avenue, one pole cracked under the strain of the weight made by the snow-covered wires and went down with a crash. The wires held, and the falling pole pulled a string of others along with it. The result was that the poles held up all the morning until the poles could be chopped and dragged away.

Bad for Weather Man.

"That weather man certainly ought to resign," was the general expression. They referred to the prediction made last night, following the afternoon of thunder showers and rain, that it would be clear and colder today.

Reports from the telegraph and telephone companies indicate that Washington is not alone in the blizzard belt. Because of the car service, even after daylight came, the visitors who spent the night at Union Station were afraid to trust themselves out. It was impossible to see the dome of the Capitol from the front of the depot, and because they could see no familiar landmarks, the persons who are slightly familiar with the city declared they would stay where they were rather than trust to luck in finding their way about.

Persons quartered in cars fared not so well. The Black Horse Troop, from Cleveland, spent the night in their cars in the railroad yards at Fourteenth and street southwest. No adequate facilities for heating were at hand, and the men and horses suffered.

Suffer From Cold.

Only one-third of the cars were heated, and the men who got a warm place and a cup of coffee this morning were considered lucky. This list included cavalry, naval militia, infantry, and the original Roosevelt Club. All these regiments from their cheerless cars at daylight, and, figuring that any port during a storm is a safe one, started on foot in street cars, taxicabs, and carriages for the places assigned for them to assemble for the parade. In addition to the Black Horse Troop, there were the Minnesota National Guard, of Minneapolis; the New York National Guard; and the Middletown National Guard. Arrangements had been made to feed the men aboard their cars, but this was impossible because of the lack of facilities for getting supplies.

Complaints from Hyattsville and other nearby points bring information that it is quite probable there may be no train service all day. The tracks are crossed by telegraph wires and poles.

The high sixty-foot poles on New York avenue, near Fifth street, which fell under the strain, created havoc with the telephone service in that part of the city, and did great damage to the houses. In some instances the poles fell directly into the buildings, smashing windows and walls, and leaving places for the wind and snow to get in.

Police telephones, too, are practically all down. Lines installed from the temporary stations established for the inauguration are all down.

Court of Honor Intact.

While poles and decorations were falling down, the Court of Honor, in front of the White House, where it had been

STOMACH TROUBLES

Relieved by a Simple Mixture That You Can Get at Any Drug Store For Little Money.

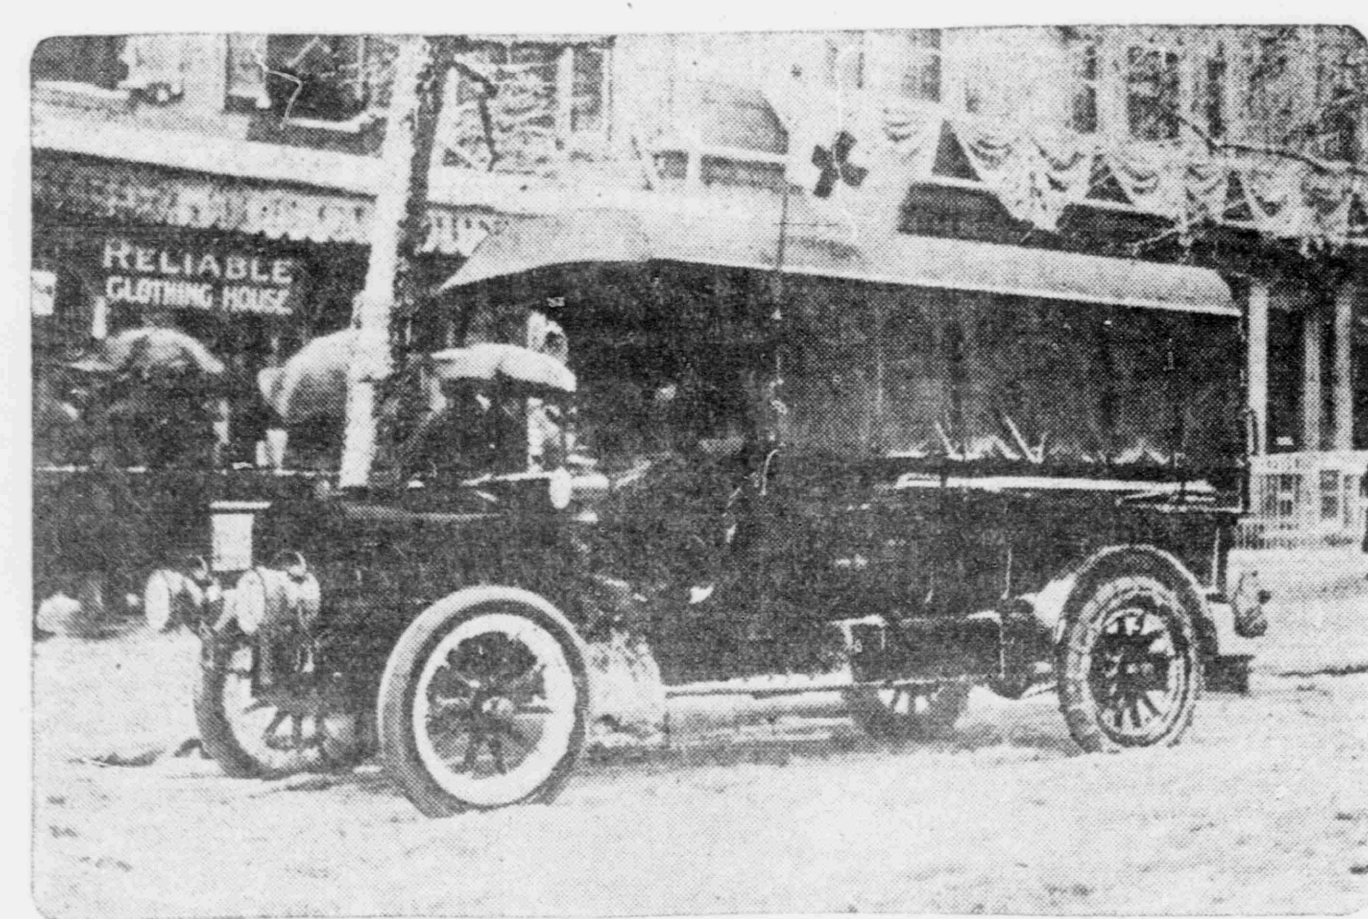

Here is a prescription that any druggist will put up for you at little cost; or you can buy the ingredients separately and mix them at home; this simple prescription is highly recommended for all cases of stomach troubles; the digestive ferments and vegetable tonics tone up the stomach and increase the secretions of the gastric juices, making the stomach perform its work.

Here is the prescription; if you suffer from stomach troubles have it filled and give it a trial:

Compound Tincture of Cinchona, one ounce; Frosene Compound, one ounce; and Sherry Wine, half a pint. Mix and take one teaspoonful in a wine glass full of water before meals and at bed time.

Stomach specialists claim that this simple prescription will relieve the worst cases of Dyspepsia, and will cure any case that is curable.

planned to have President Taft review the parade, stood the blizzard intact. As the morning progressed and there seemed to be no indication of the storm breaking, even those who had come down town decided they would not brave the elements to see the parade even if it is held, and started home as best they could.

At half past 6 every available man of the street cleaning department could press into service was put to work trying to remove the snow faster than it piled up. They began in the Court of Honor, and worked toward the Capitol, but, of course, with the obstruction growing at the rate of an inch or more an hour, it was impossible to make much headway.

West's Good Work.

Commissioner Henry L. West this morning was congratulated on every side because he prepared for just such an emergency as greeted him this morning. More than a month ago he decided that it would be wise to provide protection on every hand, and he induced Congress to provide $25,000 for the removal of snow from the route of the parade in case it was necessary. The appropriation was made with the proviso that it was to be returned to the Government Treasury if not used.

It was because of this appropriation that the District government was able to call in the men last night when it became evident that they were going to be needed. Mr. West himself was up at 4 o'clock this morning, and in a few hours had arranged to have 35 teams and 400 men on the Avenue. They will be kept at work all day in the hope that the street can be kept clear enough for the marchers.

The traffic companies, too, took advantage of the fact that this morning came early in the night and had their sweepers running. Many of their men were kept on duty for a whole day stretch, and because of the emergency many who worked all night will get no chance to rest today.

Statesmen Walk.

One of the features of the night's blizzard was the fact that the session of Congress lasted past the time for the regular cars, and many of the members of Congress had a hard time to get home. The news services, many of them, sent messengers to Baltimore with "copy," and there it was put on commercial wires and sent to its destination. Baltimore and Philadelphia papers which had sent their best highest paid men to Washington to cover what was expected to be the greatest inaugural of history, were compelled to send messengers by train, on local trains made up for the accommodation of passengers who could not wait for through trains that were so late, and many of the messengers started back with what copy could be prepared for them.

Wireless messages were tried, but because of the fact that the regular companies were so overwhelmed with messages, the press messages in many instances had to give way to the personal messages that had been filed. This crippling of the telegraph service also interfered with the movement of what trains could be gotten through, and this feature turned away many of the plans that had been made by Washingtonians for the entertainment of their visitors.

Station Packed.

With the arrival of each train last night the crowd in Union Station grew larger until it was estimated that 1,500 people had spent the night there. By 8 o'clock this morning the crowd had increased to 2,000. Many of the arrivals had not made provision for accommodations, and remained in the station. The crowd grew so large that it was difficult for one to make his way through it, and each new delegation only increased the general discomfort.

After the arrival of the Boston express, other regular and special trains from the East came into the Union Station at intervals during the morning, unloading large crowds of inaugural visitors.

The trains were unannounced, as in no instance did the station master know of their arrival until they had actually pulled into the station. Many persons who were at the station to meet friends on certain trains could obtain no information as to the time of their arrival, and missed them altogether. The outgoing trains left on regular schedule, but were held in the yards, in many instances, for several hours. Right of way was given all of the Washington-bound specials on every road.

The Seventh New York Regiment was quartered during the night in their train in the Baltimore and Ohio yards, and it was one of the few companies that had made arrangements to see that the cars were kept heated during last night. As they had their own cooking service with them, the men were comfortable.

It is estimated that the Baltimore and Ohio had 100 extra locomotives in the yards last night prepared for handling the business.

HICKS TAKES FALL FROM WEATHER MAN

Long Distance Prophecy for March 4 Weather Proves True.

Contrary to the prognostications of the Weather Bureau, which were insistently favorable until an early hour this morning, the Rev. I. R. Hicks, a meteorological expert and all-round scientist of St. Louis, Mo., on January 1, 1909, predicted the very same weather conditions which have prevailed during the last twenty-four hours. This long-range weather prophet has caused the National Weather Bureau a great amount of genuine discomfort by his correct predictions of future weather conditions. His prediction of the weather conditions during the inaugural period is as follows:

"A reactionary period has its center on the 2d, 4th, and 5th of March. This period is at the culmination of the Mercury period, with full moon in apogee following immediately on the 6th. The storm diagram shows also that a Mars disturbance enters about this time. A continued storm of unsettled, Mercurial weather will most probably come over from the close of February, but about the 4th to 6th of March storm conditions will be quickened and decided areas of rain, sleet, and snow will spread progressively from West to East across the country. The opposition of the planet Jupiter with the earth and sun, February 28, is a most important phenomenon for at least two weeks before and after that date."

STORM IS MYSTERY TO WEATHER BUREAU

Development From Yesterday's Downfall a Surprise to Forecaster.

The blizzard which descended upon Washington today, temporarily cutting off communication with the outside world, is a mystery to the weather bureau. Its development from the rain storm of yesterday was a total surprise to the forecaster. A drop in the temperature had been prophesied, but there was not a thing upon which to base fear of the miniature avalanche under which the inauguration celebration has been engulfed.

Railroads entering the city were practically out of business for a time today. Telegraph and telephone lines were of no more use than so many pieces of string, and operators vainly endeavored to get messages into or out of Washington.

For hours the United States and the world waited for news of the inauguration. About 9 o'clock the Weather Bureau announced that the indications were for an early let up in the storm, and the country's festive spirit began to lose some of the bedraggled appearance it had acquired over night.

The forecaster stated that the storm is merely local. His calculations were that the storm had passed over the city yesterday afternoon and in the ordinary course of events ought to have gone out to sea. For some unaccountable reason, however, it stopped and vented its fury upon the city. It acted contrary to all known laws.

At 10 o'clock the temperature was 29 degrees, and the barometer was rising rapidly. The forecaster announced that the sun was likely to appear at any moment.

Washington has been just at the edge of the storm, and the disturbance is today central over Long Island. It came from the north Pacific coast, starting there last Monday.

Brilliant Host in Senate Chamber Gives Greeting To New Vice President of hundreds of voices, repeating the words after the aged clergyman suggested a divine service.

Sherman Makes His Speech.

Vice President Sherman received the gavel from the hands of Mr. Fairbanks, who sat at his left near Speaker Cannon. The new Vice President then delivered his inaugural address, as follows:

Senators—There is no need to recite the history of this great legislative body, proud of it though we be; nor yet to suggest methods which might improve its efficiency. The world knows the one and you understand the other. In a government for and by the people, the necessity of clearly defining the rights and limitations of the several branches thereof is manifest. An hundred years has demonstrated the far-sightedness and wisdom of the framers of that instrument which has furnished the foundation of our legislative action. The Vice President is not one of the makers of the law. His duties are rather to regulate in this body the method of making them; to regulate not in accord with his will and his ideas, but in accord with the rules which you yourselves have established.

It is for the president-elect to require you to conform uniformly with your self-imposed regulations just as it is the duty of the Supreme Court to determine if your action is in accord with the Constitution. Two decades of service in this Capitol, though not in this Chamber, has impressed me with the weight of Senatorial responsibility, and the value of Senatorial duty well done. It is neither well to minimize the forms or exaggerate the latter, but to have both ever in mind. I am aware that the great burden is on your shoulders, not mine. I do not, however, fail to realize that I have duties to perform which require industry, a clear mind, and a controlled temper. I shall strive to perform such duties with courtesy, impartiality, and fairness.

I am inducted into the Vice Presidency with appreciation of the dignity and honor of the lofty place, and with pleasurable anticipation of close association with men of high ideals and patriotic purpose. I accept, sir, from your hand the gavel with the earnest hope that I may measure up to the standard you have set, and if I do I feel I shall have met the expectations of the most exacting. At the conclusion of his address, Vice President Sherman administered the oath to the new Senators and to those re-elected, twenty-nine in all.

OPTIMIST'S SONG.

Sing a song of optimism,
Spirits soaring high,
Four-and-twenty themes for mirth,
Not a cause to sigh;
When the spring is opened,
The birds will start to sing,
And everybody but the grouse
Will do the highland fling!
—Philadelphia Star.

TAKING ADVICE LITERALLY.

A fellow dashed by,
His eyes both a-stare—
His clothes were awry,
And his hand full of hair.
"A savage," I thought;
He replied with a shout
"This isn't a scalp—
Time's forelock pulled out!"
